

NewInfracflex® Trias: Three saunas in one

03.02.2016

At the Swissbau 2016 trade fair for the construction industry in Basel, Wädenswil-based Küng AG Saunabau showcased six of its latest and most impressive models. The smallest of them, the space-saving Infracflex® Trias corner sauna, with a footprint of just two square metres, was a particular highlight. These new models are Küng's response to the changing Swiss living environment. The onward march of urbanisation and increasing building density associated with this means that the number of people living in flats and apartments instead of detached homes is growing all the time. Even generously apportioned apartments offer little extra space for zones that do not serve a primary function, such as a sauna. To cater to this, Küng's solution is an ultra-compact sauna with all the aesthetic style and technical features of its larger cousins.

Finnish, Biosä® and infrared

Despite its small size, the Infracflex® Trias offers, as the name suggests, three different types of sauna in one. The Biosä® design heater offers a combination of high temperatures and low humidity for the classic Finnish sauna experience; alternatively, there is a gentler option that can be enjoyed for longer periods, offering temperatures of around 55° and 45% humidity. As opposed to a true sauna experience, the third option offers heat therapy from infrared heat panels that are subtly embedded in the rear walls. Infrared is a completely safe, heat-generating light source that is not visible to the eye. Instead of heating the air, it penetrates your skin, directing heat into the areas that benefit from it the most, your tissues, joints, organs and bones. Infrared energy is known to stimulate the self-healing capacity of the body's tissues, for example. The heat passes through your blood and lymphatic vessels around the entire body, stimulating the metabolism and circulation.

How aesthetics add to the overall experience

The heating plates are positioned behind the vertical alder wood panelling and blend into the stylish sauna interior without any reduction in thermal effect. Küng always aims to achieve the perfect convergence of form and function. After all, luxuriating in a sauna that has also been designed to the highest standards enhances the well-being experience. Design is an even more important factor nowadays considering that bathing and wellness zones today form part of the living area and are designed just as carefully. The design-protected Infracflex® Trias model from Küng provides an excellent example of contemporary, smaller-space living with all the desired amenities. Küng can also offer support with customisation to your precise spatial requirements or with regard to the choice of materials.

